The Art of Being Well Dressed

Study Your Type and Above All Do Not Attempt Bizarre Effects Unless You Are Sure You Can Wear Them Successfully

(DOROTHY PHILLIPS BROWN)

ALWAYS DRESS TO SUIT THE OCCASION

ONLY the other day in a smart restaurant I sat across from a woman dressed in a brown crepe de chine afternoon gown. The material was a heavy crepe, and it was developed in a pleasing fashion, just—all over the surface of the finished product some terrible person had embroidered huge bouquets of pink heads! Pink, mind you, on brown! And bouquets of beads on a plain little street frock. With this attempt at a dressy attire, she wore a tailored hat, and sports oxfords on gray buck!

Cannot you imagine the picture which such an ensemble would make? And although no one could attempt to dispute the fact that it is horribly rude to criticize the attire of others; well, sometimes we can't help it, that's all! The best of us are only human.

What With What?

It's really an art, and no innocent, sensible one at that to know what to wear with what. And it is particularly easy to err in the habit of mixing up sports clothes with those which one is supposed to reserve for more formal occasions. To be sure it is now considered quite permissible to appear at dinner in the most exclusive hotel in a sports costume, in fact one mustn't think everywhere with the possible exception of a look at the opera. And a growing number of women wear sports garments who never do anything more athletic than applaud a spectacular polo player from the seat of their little boxes.

But at the same time, the woman who makes a study of her clothes as every woman must do who hopes to appear at her best, which is her certain duty, never mixes the distinct types of clothes. A dainty slipper of suede, satin or patent leather is the only possible one for dress wear, and it is equally out of place on the linen. Similarly, the mannish Oxford never correctly accompanies a feminine, dainty gown of exquisite or other delicate material. It is an absolute impossibility, to get through a season, with only one kind of hat, and she who attempts to do it is ruined. Unless, of course, she sticks persistently to one type of dressing throughout.

Even then, the hat question is a difficult one. For there is nothing which will more completely ruin the effect of a lovely gown than a hat of a color which hopelessly clashes. Accessories, too, are another thing which a warning signal needs to be erected. Fancy a handsome headband with a tulle for girdle, and a seagrass leather one with a chiffon dance of frills. Heads never played a more prominent part, and it is quite possible to avoid greatly the charm of the tea tray and everything needed to a costume or to ruin it by the right or wrong color. Not Looking Right. The American woman of today has definitely decided to pay attention to her dressing. She no longer thinks it is a mark of vanity or frivolity to spend considerable time in finding out what is becoming to her. And when once she finds this out, she feels the satisfaction of knowing which she is correctly and smartly attired, she can then forget all about clothes and go about her various activities. So that in the end it is really a saving, both of time and effort, since the woman who does not do this is continually fretting, and just colorless hair. And the lines of the gown, which were so distinctive on knowledge, that she doesn't know today may be altogether wrong on

There are certain lines for every woman which accentuate her good points and hide her poor ones. And perhaps there is no greater sin in the sartorial world than that of imitating someone whose gown we may admire. Imitating it blindly, that is; for it is the most natural thing in the world to choose and feel the satisfaction of knowing which we have looked with favor, or tired, she can then forget all about clothes and go about her various activities. So that in the end it is really a saving, both of time and effort, since the woman who does not do this is continually fretting, and just colorless hair. And the lines of the gown, which were so distinctive on knowledge, that she doesn't know today may be altogether wrong on

Five O'Clock Tea

THIS is an easy and successful way of entertaining for the hostess who has a limited hospitable ease with which we offer service, or not an over-deep purse. It is a charming and delightful function, whether it is a regular meal or an afternoon tea.

Sometimes I know, who is a charming hostess, but whose increasing family cares and numerous school and college expenses have put out of her mind the idea of entertaining. I have made her 5 o'clock tea, a percolator is the ideal way of making it. Cocoa and chocolate are also delicious. When you offer this, serve as accompaniment a dish of marshmallows. Top each slice of lemon and orange. When preparing to serve tea, stick a lemon with a few cloves before slicing it, including a clove or two in most of the slices. Put an orange on the tea tray, also, and try the experiment of rubbing a cube of sugar over the peel before adding it to a cup of your cream tea.

It is very appealing to some plates and covered with napkins wrung out in cold water, and set in a cold place.

A sandwich filling which is delicious is made by mixing with catsup or chili sauce as much grated cheese as it will take up. This kind of a sandwich is delicious toasted and served hot; when so doing, cut the bread a little thicker. Ribbon sandwiches are very ornamental. They are made of two slices each of graham and white bread, at least one-half an inch thick; spread liberally with butter and press firmly together, alternating the graham and white slices, first laying at right angles to the surface powder, juice of half a lemon, half shortening, one-eighth teaspoon of salt, or any stock. Trim the coffee, fry it brown in the butter in a saucepan, stir in the coffee

Ribbon sandwiches are even more popular than cakes or crackers. These may be made beforehand, arranged on

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—Owing to the absence of a large number of speculators, trading in the New York stock market was narrow, irregular and generally regarded as unimportant. FARM PRODUCE
WAS HEAVY ON CITY MARKET

Dealers Found Large Demand for Most Lines at Good Prices

The supply of farm products on the Erie River market Saturday was somewhat heavier than usual. However the demand was good and the dealers were able to find a ready market for most items at good prices. There was a slight tendency for a reduction in the price of some of the vegetables, but this was expected on this date of the year when the bulk of the garden crops are coming in.

Potatoes were sold in small quantities at the per bushel in some cases as high as the was being made, or about 10 cents. The quality was exceptionally good.

Onions and cauliflower were sold at 10 cents per bushel. The buyers were offering cabbage, A. 10 cents per bushel. The quality was of good quality and some of the heads weighed at from 5 to 10 pounds.

Cucumbers for pickling, being sold in small lots at three pounds for the dozen. The grading was sold at two for the dozen.

There was a demand for turnips and beets, sold in small quantities for so per bushel. Some of the dealers were offering turnips for eight pounds for the dozen.
